

Nicole Unice

Nicole Unice is a fresh voice for the next generation. Part bible teacher, part community organizer, part busy mom—Nicole has the uncanny ability to relate to people in all ages and stages of life with her “keeping it real” approach to ordering a life around God’s word.

Nicole’s teaching reaches wide, both as a writer and speaker. Her work has been featured in a wide range of publications, including the Christianity Today publications Kyria and Her.menuetics. Nicole is a contributing editor for Gifted for Leadership and serves in family and student ministry at Hope Church in Richmond, Virginia.

Nicole’s invitations to speak have taken her across the country to conferences like Synergy and women’s retreats, big and small. As if her caffeine addiction wasn’t enough, Nicole has endless energy for digging deeply into God’s word and sharing truths that are both insightful and practical. Her first bible study, The Divine Pursuit: A Study of Jonah was a featured resource for the Evangelical Presbyterian Church. She’s Got Issues is Nicole’s first book, releasing in May from Tyndale House Publishers.

Nicole received her undergraduate degree in Psychology from the College of William and Mary and her master’s degree in Christian Counseling from Gordon-Conwell Theological Seminary. She loves creating a space for ministry and spiritual formation in the everyday rhythms of life with her awesome husband Dave, their three young children, and a mischievous puppy named Shep. Nicole is known for making friends in all corners of the world—especially via social media. So connect with her on her Facebook page or via Twitter—and please visit Nicole on her website www.nicoleunice.com.
